ABOUT BRIDGETTE CHAMBERS, PhD

Bridgette Chambers, PhD, is a nationally recognized speaker, executive, educator, and investor who speaks on leadership, organizational transformation, culture, conflict, entrepreneurship, and the pursuit of purposeful work. Over the course of her speaking career, she has appeared on programs and stages alongside influential leaders and voices including General Colin Powell, Michael Eisner, Seth Godin, Lisa Leslie, and Lance Armstrong.

Bridgette is known for bringing the realities of leadership into the room. Drawing from decades of experience leading companies, advising executives, investing in emerging businesses, and developing future leaders, she translates complex organizational challenges into practical ideas that audiences can understand, apply, and act upon.

Throughout her career, Bridgette has led and advised organizations through more than $1 billion in acquisitions, exits, and organizational transformations. She currently leads BCPK Investments, a boutique investment firm focused on emerging opportunities in wellness, and serves as Managing Executive Partner at Advantery Partners, advising executives and organizations navigating transformation, growth, organizational change, and complex strategic challenges.

Bridgette also serves as an Executive Professor at Texas A&M University's Mays Business School, where she brings real-world executive experience and expectations into the classroom while developing current and future leaders.

An U.S. Army Reserve veteran, Bridgette's perspective on leadership is grounded in service, accountability, disciplined execution, and stewardship. Whether addressing executives, entrepreneurs, emerging leaders, or large organizational audiences, she challenges people to move beyond simply understanding leadership principles to putting them into practice.

Her goal from the stage is simple: give people something worth thinking about—and something they can use when they return to work.
